

Rules are Contentious

“Names should not be associated with semantics because everybody has their own hidden assumptions about what semantics are, and they clash, causing comprehension problems without knowing why. This is why it's valuable to write code to reflect what code is actually doing, rather than what code ‘means’: it’s hard to have conceptual clashes about what code actually does.”

– Craig Silverstein, Google